yikes! totally embarrassing moments

I have been on the swim team since I was a little girl. We were up against our biggest competitor of the season, and I was certain that I could beat their all-star swimmer. We got up on the starter blocks, and I was off like lightning as soon as the race started. I immediately took the lead, and the longer I went, the more I could hear the crowd shouting for me, getting louder and louder. I felt like I was swimming my best race ever! All of a sudden, I felt something grab a hold of me. It was my coach! It turns out that someone had false started and the race had stopped, but I didn't realise it. My coach had to hop in and catch me! Everyone was laughing at me, but I got out of the pool graciously and got back on the starting block.

Unfortunately, I was so tired after my "practice" run, I didn't have the strength to do as well as I did before. So, I was a laughing stock and a loser! – Helen

Roadtest Fleeces

1 Lowe Alpine Aleutian Eclipse Jacket £60

Made from 100 per cent polyester which has been treated to offer insulation. This fleece is warm but offers little or no rain protection. It washed well, retaining its shape, and it can also be zipped into an outer jacket.
Pro: concealed pockets and fleece cuffs
Con: a bit shapeless

2 Berghaus Activity fleece in Midnight Blue £60

This zip-up fleece with a high collar is made from 100 per cent polyester which has undergone a durable, water-repellent treatment. It fits snugly around the hips to keep out the cold. The cuffs are Lycra bound and the hem has a retained elasticated drawcord for a tighter fit. It washed well and dried quickly, retaining its shape. Can be zipped into an outer jacket.
Pro: two internal security pockets
Con: unusual colour

3 Sirocco jacket CHA598 £62

Made from 78.5 per cent polyester and 21.5 per cent DuPont Softec yarn, this fleece is very light to wear. Our tester found it offered the least warmth and suffered after washing, showing evidence of piling on the inside.
Pro: long body and high collar
Con: sits oddly over hips when zipped

4 Poly fleece by Marks & Spencer £25

Made from 100 per cent polyester, this fleece is reasonably warm but the cuffs are wide, giving no wind protection.
Pro: excellent value for money
sizes up to 22 available
Con: not suitable for serious outdoor activities

TELL US WHAT YOU REALLY THINK

Reading "Mum's the word" (February) about 17-year-old mother Angela Plaisted and her adorable son Dylan, sent you, our readers, into a writing frenzy.

Angela Plaisted is to be commended! It's not easy being a single mum, especially at such a young age, but Angela has proved that it's certainly not impossible.

Emma, Qld

I think Angela is very courageous and Dylan is very lucky to have a mum who loves him so much.

Kallie, Vic

I think Angie has done really well with her adorable son Dylan. She has great strength and heaps of courage. I hope people in situations like hers will follow her excellent example.

Carmen, NSW

I admire Angela so much for her achievements and success at raising such a great little boy at such a young age. And I know for a fact that I could never do such a thing. I wish her and Dylan the best of luck.

Megan, NSW

I was affected by Angela's story when I read it in the February issue and often wondered how she was doing. Even though Darren couldn't stick by her, she has become a fab mum. Good luck.

Lisa, NSW

What an experience it must have been for supermum, Angela. I was so happy to see that she is making the most of her situation and life with son, Dylan. You go girl! You make young girls like us proud.

TRAINED BY PIGMIES

Police officers at work

FOR the first time, a British police force is being taught to use traditional native tracking skills to catch housebreakers, thieves and murderers.

Greater Manchester Police have hired the services of Eddie McGhee, Britain's answer to Crocodile Dundee.

Eddie is a former Parachute Regiment Warrant Officer and one of Britain's top survival skills experts. He's lived with pigmies in Africa, the Bedouin in the Sahara, Aborigines in Australia and the Ibans in Indonesia.

Now, he's developed a special two-week training course for crime scene examiners. The evidence experts aren't only trained to recognise vital signs which lay a trail, but also to sharpen their observation skills.

By using tracking techniques, scenes-of-crime officers may be able to pinpoint more likely areas to be searched, increasing the chances of finding valuable forensic evidence.

Eddie can even tell whether the person being tracked is on the run, injured or carrying a weight, such as a body.

Steal your car back!

What police told car owner after she found her lost vehicle

By Nilufer Atik

1 When Mrs Tina Minister found her stolen car parked close to her home, the first thing she did was telephone the police. But their response left her stunned.

2 Officers advised the 33-year-old accountant to steal the car back again – by using a hacksaw to break the steering wheel lock.

3 They told Mrs Minister they did not have the necessary resources to send an officer out to wait for the thief and arrest him when he returned to the vehicle.

4 Mrs Minister, a mother of two, told this newspaper yesterday how she was convinced she would never see her Toyota Corolla again after it was stolen from outside her home in Gorton, Greater Manchester. But a day later she spotted the vehicle as she was taking her daughter to school.

5 Although the number plates had been changed and a new lock fitted to the steering wheel, Mrs Minister recognised her personal belongings inside the vehicle. And the tax disc still had the correct registration written on it.

6 Greater Manchester Police offered to send a recovery vehicle to collect the car, but said the service would cost more than £100. Alternatively, they suggested, Mrs Minister could ask her insurance company to collect the car – although this may have meant losing her no-claims bonus. As mentioned, the third option police suggested, was to simply steal the car back.

7 So, Mrs Minister reluctantly asked her 35-year-old husband Craig to use a hacksaw on the lock.

8 Still bemused yesterday, she said: 'I thought I was lucky to find the car and immediately contacted the police because I wanted the thief caught. I can't understand why the police did so little when they could have found the culprit so easily.'

9 I shouldn't have to steal my own car back. Even if they did not have the time to wait and watch the car they could have carried out some inquiries to see if they could catch the thief.'

10 Mrs Minister, who has previously had two other cars stolen, added: 'The whole experience has been a total nightmare. If my car was not taxed, I'd be an easy target for the police, but when I'm an innocent victim it seems they can do very little for me.'

11 A spokesman for Greater Manchester Police said: 'She wanted us to stake out the car to catch the thief. Unfortunately, we do not have the resources for an officer to sit watching a car. Even if we did, there is no guarantee that the person who returned to the car would be the one who stole it.'

12 We would also be in danger of having to start a pursuit, which we always try to avoid.'

13 The spokesman said the car's number plates had been taken away for fingerprinting.

Peak time for rescue teams

Summer is the busiest season for the volunteers who save those stranded in the mountains. Tony Durrant reports

In action: mountain rescuers in the Lake District

And they're off, like cattle heading for their summer pastures. The nation's army of fair-weather rambblers, scramblers and dangles is dusting off their hiking boots, unknotting ropes, packing sandwiches and heading for the hills.

Which is why that tough band of volunteers for the country's mountain-rescue teams are busiest when the weather is at its best. That's right – emergency call-outs do not peak in the bleak midwinter. No, the 'silly season' for the rescue teams is June to September.

The Keswick Mountain Rescue Team was called out 67 times last year – 14 times, for example, in September. Six of those calls were on one day and included a girl of 10 with a sprained ankle; two paragliders falling down a cliff at take off; a woman with a locked knee and a search for a suicidal person, later found in Wigan.

On the night of July 13, the team had to organise a full-scale search using an RAF helicopter, search dogs and 16 volunteers to locate a 29-year-old woman who had set out to cross one of the highest mountains in Wales. She had no equipment and was wearing a light shell suit and training shoes. She was found unharmed and put on the next train to Wigan. The following day, six members of the team struggled up the west face of 3,000ft-high Tryfan to rescue a pet dog stuck in a hole. And together with the dogs, wanderers from Wigan and shell suit hikers come the growing numbers of mobile-phoners. With their map and compass at the bottom of their rucksacks, or back in the car boot next to their common sense, they reach for their trusty Nokia, assuming rescue teams are a kind of free AA service¹⁾ for hikers, and RAF helicopters are a taxpayers' right.

Mark Hodgson, the Keswick team leader, highlights a particular mobile-phone incident as probably the most unnecessary call-out of the year. It came from a female walker. "She had all the right equipment and a mobile phone," says Mark. "Having lost contact with the rest of her group she sat down, dialled 999 and waited to be shepherded from the mountain. This we did, only to find that the rest of her group were drinking in a pub, totally unconcerned."

The nature of mobile phones also causes confusion. A bewildered walker in Snowdonia used his to call for help and was put through to a mountain-rescue controller who had never heard of the peak the walker claimed he was lost on. "I'm in Snowdonia," came the panicked voice over the airwaves. "That may be, sir," replied the controller, "but I'm in Dublin," which was the site of the nearest phone mast to pick up the signal.

However, the message for mobile users is: take it with you if you go into the hills. In the right hands, mobile phones are very 15. They save vital time in an emergency.

Despite the complaints about mountain madness, our rescue teams are quick to point out they are all volunteers who do their job because they love the mountains. So they won't charge you or chew your head off for calling them out in an emergency, day or night, 365 days a year.

As Hodgson advises: "People should do their thing in the mountains. They are there for everybody." Even if you're from Wigan.

ARCADIA'S FOR ADULTS ONLY!

By DAVID GORDOIS

ARCADIA, one of the UK's favourite cruise liners, is to become a brilliant adults-only ship.

Sadly it means no more young feet pounding round the decks and no more shrill screeches from kids at play. So, as you might suspect, grown-ups are rushing to book!

The bold decision by P&O Cruises to provide child-free breaks is sure to be a winner. After all, hotel firm Warner turned adults-only holidays ashore into a mega-success.

But parents needn't worry. The vast majority of P&O cruises will still warmly

IDYLLIC: Grown-ups will love it on Arcadia welcome kids aboard their other liners, with full facilities for them.

Arcadia carries 1,458 passengers and the grown-up breaks, for people aged at least 18, start next May with a seven-night trip to Spain, Portugal, France and Guernsey from £700 per person.

Other Arcadia cruises visit the Baltic, Canaries and Mediterranean. Prices are from £1,421.

Security stepped up for school parties

1 Security on foreign school trips is being stepped up following a number of incidents in which coaches carrying pupils were used for drug smuggling.

2 Last autumn, three suitcases of cannabis resin worth £1.5m were found among the luggage of a group of children returning from a foreign trip. Another school party was delayed by 12 hours at Dover after cannabis with a street value of £500,000 was discovered on their vehicle as they headed home from Spain.

3 Top Class Travel, a specialist operator for school trips, is sufficiently disturbed to have launched a scheme with the Anti-Drugs Alliance: "We've had minor incidents in the past, but last year we saw a couple of serious ones," said Jim Manson, managing director at Top Class.

4 "We are concerned that, as other sources dry up for smugglers, school parties will become more vulnerable to these sorts of crimes."

5 After five months of consultation with school authorities, anti-drug experts and HM Customs and Excise, it has introduced a bag-tagging scheme. In future, all luggage on its trips will have special labels that will be allocated and checked by the party leader in conjunction with the coach driver.

6 "At the end of a holiday, children come out of the hotel and throw their bags into a pile in the street. It's easy for someone who has been watching the hotel to add an extra one or two," says Manson. "It is particularly common in Holland, but it is also now happening in France and Spain."

Killer dolphins help children

Mark Franchetti
Moscow

AT the height of the cold war, base 99727 at Bukhta Kazachya on the Crimean peninsula¹⁾ was one of the most hidden military compounds in the former Soviet Union.

Behind its high walls, military experts taught dozens of dolphins to locate enemy vessels and plant explosives on their hulls.

Those days are gone. In a sign of more peaceful times, some of the "killer" dolphins have been retrained to play with children suffering psychological problems in a project said to offer promising results.

Every day several children troop into the base past armed guards, now controlled by the Ukrainian military, and are lowered to the waiting dolphins in the Black Sea.

Supervised by doctors and specialist trainers, they then have the opportunity to play and swim with the animals, whose clicks and rhythmic motions are believed to be therapeutic.

"We first understood that dolphins have such therapeutic qualities at the end of the 1980s," said Lyudmilla Lukina, the centre's chief doctor. "It has become so popular that we now have a one-year waiting list. The whole exercise calms the children down and helps them to deal with their problems."

More than 2,000 children – ranging from the autistic to the merely shy – have passed through the base.

The courses could not have come at a better time for base 99727. When the Ukrainians took over the complex after the collapse of the Soviet Union, a chronic lack of funding left the centre's 70 dolphins facing a bleak future: each animal eats 40lbs of fish a day and their upkeep was no longer seen as a priority by the Ukrainian navy.

Now, at £15 a session, the dolphin therapy is a potentially lucrative business. The method has become so effective that Colonel Alexander Borshchyov, deputy commander of the base, hopes to use it with Russian military officers suffering stress after serving in Chechnya.

Win a place in my boyband

LADS, do you wanna be in my band? This is YOUR chance to really make it big - in Rav's boyband!

Just imagine it. All the fame, glamour and riches you have ever dreamed of. Limos everywhere, champagne on tap, screaming girls begging to date you.

Fancy it? Well, stick with me because I'm launching the talent contest to beat the lot.

We aim to re-create the excitement generated by Take That (pictured below) when they took the world by storm.

They were the boys who had girls fainting everywhere, won bucket loads of awards and became true superstars.

It was a sad day for pop when they split. And recently there was another black moment when chart-toppers Five (pictured just above) decided to call it a day. But the great news is that we are going to fill that gap – and YOU could be one of FIVE lucky News of the World readers up there living out that dream! I've teamed up with BMG/RCA Records to search for a group that is destined for overnight stardom. You can't fail—you'll be featured in the best showbiz column in the entire universe. Mine!

The label's general manager, Sonny Takhar, explained: "With Five, Westlife and Take That we worked hard and sold over 25 million records.

"Now we really believe News of the World can help us find a bunch of new stars to become household names.

"This is truly the chance of a lifetime. We're looking for individual male singers who can dance, look good and have a laugh at themselves."

Reckon you're our man? Then start practising in front of that mirror, ask for an invitation and then get down to the auditions on Saturday, July 1, at Urdang Academy, 20-22 Shelton Street in London's Covent Garden between 10am and 1pm.

Next stop Top of the Pops. Good luck!

Inleiding

In de Engelse krant News of the World (zie tekst 13) heb je het artikel van Rav gelezen waarin hij lezers uitnodigt om mee te doen aan een auditie voor een 'boyband'. Je zou zelf wel graag willen meedoen, maar helaas ben je niet Brits / geen jongen.

Jij hebt een vriend in Engeland, Sean, die volgens iedereen veel talent heeft en er al jaren van droomt een beroemd popidool te worden. Sean is op dit moment op reis, dus schrijf jij een brief aan Rav om te zorgen dat je vriend uitgenodigd kan worden.

Je vraagt of er een minimumleeftijd is voor de deelnemers. Sean is net 16 jaar geworden. Je stuurt een DVD mee waarop te zien is hoe goed hij kan dansen en zingen. Natuurlijk hoop je dat hij wordt opgeroepen voor de audities. Je vraagt of de uitnodiging direct naar jouw adres kan worden gestuurd, want je ziet hem binnenkort. Het adres waar je naar toe schrijft is:

Schrijf de brief (in het Engels!) in uitwerkbijlage 2. Maak gebruik van de informatie uit bovenstaande inleiding bij het uitwerken van de volgende punten:

- Schrijf waar je de informatie over de audities gelezen hebt en
- leg uit waarom jij (en niet Sean) deze brief schrijft.
- Vertel iets over het talent van Sean en
- zijn ambitie (popidool worden.)
- Stel je vraag over de minimumleeftijd.
- Vertel waarom je een DVD hebt meegestuurd.
- Vertel wat je hoopt.
- Vraag beleefd of de uitnodiging direct naar jouw adres gestuurd kan worden.
- Schrijf een passende slotzin.
